It prohibited men from taking justice into their own hands. The judges represented God, because they were authorized to apply God's law in their decisions. In fact, the word elohim is often translated "judges," as we see in Exodus 21:6 KJV, "his master shall bring him unto the judges" (elohim, "God, or gods").

Isaiah, Prophet of Salvation, Book 9, part 5

Either conditional love or unconditional love is a humanistic psychological term and not actually found in the Bible. God's love, as revealed in the Bible, is eternal (1 John 4:16-18), perfect (Psalm 33:5, 143:8, Exodus 15:13), and infinite (Ephesians 3:16-19). However, God's love is often described as unconditional because humans, deep in their hearts, long to be loved and ...

[D]oing justice with an eye to the needy becomes an act [also] of grace and mercy." And therefore, God's restorative justice "is not, like his anger, opposed to his steadfast love but is closely akin and synonymous with it." His justice is "simultaneously the manifestation of his grace (Psalm 97:11-12;
